AUDIENCE BREAKDOWN

In 2023, Deloitte published its industry outlook for the year. The company predicted five main trends would shape the sector: market dynamics, supply chain, the future of work, emerging technologies and sustainability. It reasoned that while the engineering and construction sector had been historically slow to adopt new technologies, industry players were paying increasing attention to digital developments. It said that increasing global supply chain disruptions, competition, skill shortages and higher prices made the need for Digital Transformation that much stronger.

Additionally, when McKinsey & Company hosted its annual Global Infrastructure Initiative Summit, leaders from across investing, construction, energy, transportation and real estate gathered to discuss sustainability within the sector. The summit focused on the role of infrastructure in decarbonisation and how companies can transition towards net zero. This highlights the future of this vertical, with green energy being a pivotal point in the industry. However, despite this heightened focus, the United Nations Environment

Programme's 2022 Global Status Report for Building and Construction found that the sector was not on track to achieve decarbonisation by 2050. Needless to say, this is concerning.

But, all of this cannot be done without technology. To achieve net zero, businesses must embrace Digital Transformation for growth and sustainability. Intelligent Build.tech aims to inform key decision-makers about developments within the industry and how technology can bring together construction and the environment.

Furthermore, our integrated platforms enable the industry to receive the content it needs in a manner that suits it. It is our unparalleled understanding of this audience that enables Intelligent Build.tech to deliver effective campaigns aimed at ensuring maximum return on investment, combined with sustained brand awareness across our digital platforms. Strategic partnerships with regional industry bodies, events and research companies enable us to both manage and grow the audience.
